awww.... poor angry kitteh. her monkey hasn't been around for her to yell at.

Did I ever tell you about the time my mother-in-law sent her daughter salsa ingredients in a paper package, through the post?

S-i-L was living on an army base at the time, and got a fairly confused and slightly panicked phone call from the post office people. "Mrs. K---? We have a package for you, that's squashy and leaking red stuff. Could you do something about it?" I feel like, the second time it happened they knew what to expect. And hey! it was almost salsa both times. Only, you know, not.

Which is the long way around of explaining why I am sending you virtual soup. Because I feel as though soup travels by post nearly as well as tomatoes do.

so. have some virtual soup.

prfct. xcpt angry kitteh is tortie. like this:

<http://cats.about.com/od/catspicturecalendar/ig/Tortoiseshell/Baby.htm>

only muddier colored.

I wondered about that, but the only description that I could find was tabby.

Besides, none of the tortie pics look sufficiently angry. :)

She's a tortie? Much is explained.

I was informed, back when I did rescue, that torties have a reputation for being a little bit bitchy.

From my own experience, all of my torties have been small cats with big attitudes, and prone to bossing around anyone who gets in the way.

For what it's worth, Jaime, my own little dilute tortie and one of the twin terrors (her sister is Jasper, named for the French phrase J'aime et J'espere) not only yells at me (for pretty much everything), she's been known to yell at the houseplants (long story) and at other cats when she wants to play with them. She knows her own mind and isn't afraid to share it.

All of which is to say that it's very sweet that Angry Kitteh's card is a very sweet sign of affection. Jaime would approve.

My first cat was a tortie, and she was sweet as could be. Well, to me, anyway.

Now I have two black cats, who are brats and torment everycritter in the house, and a calico with heterochromia, who is alternately the toughest thing in the house and a total chicken, and a large black shaggy dog who's just starting another growth spurt and is eating and/or destroying everything in site. Despite this excessive wealth of animals, I might still have to take a tortie if one insisted upon coming into my life.

There are exceptions to every rule, of course. One of the shyest cats I ever fostered was a gorgeous little calico I called Nandina. I hope that her forever home was good and gentle to her for the rest of her life.

Jaime and Jasper are actually remarkable affectionate cats, they just go about it in a very particular way. This means that they'll do things like climb into your lap whether you want a cat there or not, and if you protest, they'll give you a Look. You know, the "your opinion is loud and unwarranted" look. They also scold me if I don't pet them enough.

Jaime is also fond of sitting on my back. She'll follow me around when I'm cleaning litterboxes and wait until I'm hunched over. Then she's meow once, in warning, and jump onto my back to have a nap. It's very Marc Anthony and Pussyfoot.

I am their monkey servant.

As for cats with thumbs - Holly Lisle has a book where one of the side comments is that some wizard once gave a breed of cats opposable thumbs.

Casanova-kitty, much lamented, used to have his paw inked to sign holiday cards to his previous human. (Yes, I cleaned the ink off before he could lick it off.) I later acquired a pawprint stamp...

And Angry Kitteh, like all Real Cats, belives that hoomans should do everything on kitteh's command.
